

ABSTRACT

In an implementation of printing system calibration, a printing system includes a print unit and a calibration system. The calibration system has a learning mode operable to receive a master calibration page containing color value indicia, and measure the color value indicia to determine target color values each corresponding to a color value indicia. The calibration system can utilize a target color value to calibrate the print unit.